

I live in the San Francisco Bay Area, and the overall quality of news reporting and community services here has dropped off severely and noticeably during the past several years. I attribute this, at least in part, to the concentration of ownership in fewer hands. Because media resources tend to be limited and of concern to the entire community, these resources should be considered as public utilities and not to be influenced by marketplace and business interests ahead of public interests.